MONTHLY COMMENTARY

The NewGen Alternative Income Fund (Class F) returned -0.07% in October (14.39% YTD) including a regular monthly distribution of 4.85c/unit. October 2025 was a month of cautious optimism and resilience for North American markets amid ongoing political and economic uncertainties. The S&P 500 advanced 2.3% over the month, closing near all-time highs around 6,840. The NASDAQ surged 4.7%, buoyed by strong performances in megacap tech stocks like Nvidia, which in late October became the first company to reach $5 trillion in market value. Canada's TSX recorded its sixth consecutive month of gains, buoyed by AI optimism, which propelled the technology sector to double-digit performance. The marker's winning streak was tested early in the month amidst the beginning of a US government shutdown and news that the US administration would increase its tariff rate on goods from China. However, sentiment recovered on news of a trade framework between the US and China after a meeting between the two countries' respective leaders. Central bank policy remained accommodative as both the BoC and US Fed cut rates to their lowest level in the last three years. In commodities, oil prices softened due to OPEC+ output increases and subdued global demand forecasts, while copper saw a rally fueled by supply concerns. Gold continued to climb, reaching an all-time high of US$4,356/oz before finishing the month just above US$4,000/oz. Uranium prices dipped slightly from September's high but remained elevated due to ongoing supply cuts from major producers and rising nuclear power demand forecasts. The US dollar was slightly firmer while yields finished a touch lower. Across the TSX, Technology (+13.8%), Health Care (+4.1%) and Utilities (+4%) led, while Materials (-5%), Real Estate (-4.3%) and Consumer Staples (-1.3%) lagged. Some noteworthy winners from the month included: (1) long Cameco Corp (CCO-TSX), which announced a major partnership with Brookfield Asset Management (BAM-TSX) and the US government to build new nuclear reactors, (2) l
